Topics Discussed:

During this week meeting, the primary focus was on state diagrams, activity diagrams, and use case diagrams. We began by discussing the different types of use case diagrams, including behavioral and static. We talked about the importance of proceeding from requirements and user scenarios to ensure that our use cases accurately reflect the needs of our users. Next, we discussed activity diagrams, which can also be either behavioral or static. We emphasized the need to proceed from use case diagrams to ensure that our activity diagrams are aligned with our overall project goals. Finally, we discussed state diagrams, which are dynamic and sensitive to changes in the software state. We emphasized the need to proceed from activity diagrams to ensure that our state diagrams accurately reflect the behavior of our software. Throughout the meeting, we emphasized the importance of creating clear, accurate, and comprehensive diagrams to aid in the development and testing of our project. We also discussed the need to collaborate closely with our development team to ensure that our diagrams are aligned with the overall goals and objectives of the project.

Decisions Made:

- We decided to use draw.io to create the diagrams for the project.
- We decided to collaborate and discuss each diagram with each other to ensure they are accurate and comprehensive.

Tasks Assigned:

- Griselda, Blerta and Gesjana will work on activity diagrams.
- Melisa, Rea and Eldi will work on state diagrams.
- Enes Vrana will work on use cases diagrams.
